II. Catalog Description

Prerequisite: ENGL 111 English Composition I. This course is a study of the nature and value of comic forms and traditions, from basic elements such as puns and jokes to significant works of comic vision in literature, the arts and popular culture. The course will consider, for example, the differences between verbal and visual comedy – and broaden students’ understanding of the role that comedy plays in the human experience.

III. Statement of Course Need

A. Literature of Comedy offers students the opportunity to study in depth one of the most popular and pervasive of contemporary genres in the arts. In addition to providing pleasure and insight, the course allows students to gain highly focused experience as careful and responsive readers and observers, creative and analytical thinkers, lucid and incisive writers, and articulate and persuasive speakers. Because comedy is a genre that is already familiar and popular among students, this course provides a foundation for students in understanding the perspective of comic legacies that are rooted in ancient and contemporary cultures.

B. This course does not have a Lab component.

C. This course generally transfers as an English program elective.

IV. Place of Course in College Curriculum
